The Old City — Root of Shanghai

The Old City has been witnessing the historical development of Shanghai since it was established as a county in the Song Dynasty. The Old City constitutes a physical display of Shanghai's 700-year cultural path and a visual interpretation of the city's urban civilization. As a political, economic and cultural center of Shanghai in history, the Old City today still retains many ancient buildings, making it well-known at home and abroad and drawing visitors to trace the old times of the city.

Relics of the Old City

Nanxiang Steamed Bun Restaurant
No. 87, Yuyuan Road

In the first year of the 20th century (1900), Wu Xiangsheng from Nanxiang Town, Jiading County opened a dim sum restaurant here. It was originally called Chang Xing Lou but renamed Nanxiang Steamed Bun Restaurant later. Early in the 1920s and 1930s, it was already a household name. Specialties: Fresh Pork Soup Dumplings, Crab Roe Soup Dumplings, Crab Roe and Fresh Pork Soup Dumplings

Lu Bo Lang Restaurant
No. 115, Yuyuan Road

Sitting beside the Zigzag Bridge, Lu Bo Lang is a good companion of Hu Xin Ting. It was built in the Qijiang Reign of the Ming Dynasty as a southwestern part of Pan's Yuyuan Garden, transformed into a teahouse operated by a merchant in the Qing Dynasty, and expanded into the Lu Bo Lang Restaurant in 1991. Known for its Shanghai-style cuisine, the restaurant is a signature of Shanghai flavor. Specialties: Sauteed Shelled Shrimps, Braised Jumbo Sea Cucumber with Shrimp Roe, Eyebrow-shaped Flaky Pastry

Yuyuan Garden Malls

Boasting a wide variety of products, the Yuyuan Garden Malls around the City God Temple is another indispensable signature and symbol of the Yuyuan Garden. It is mainly composed of the area around the Fuyoumen Shopping Mall on the Fuyou Road, which is less than a kilometer long, and the area around the Yueyuan Shopping Mall.

City God Temple
No. 249, Middle Fangbang Road

The history of building a city god temple in downtown Shanghai has been recorded since the Tang Dynasty. The ancient temple that sits now in the Old City has been carrying and displaying the beliefs and traditions of the Chinese nation since the Ming and Qing dynasties. In 1994, the City God Temple's renovation was resumed and later the temple was gradually opened to the public. At present, the Taoist temple and its surrounding tourist attractions, such as the snack street, Zigzag Bridge, Hu Xin Ting Teahouse and Yuyuan Garden, are part of a unique tourism and cultural signature of Shanghai's Old City.

Yuyuan Garden
No. 218, Anren Street

The Yuyuan Garden has a history of more than 460 years so far. Built in 1559, it was originally the private garden of Pan Yunduan who used to be Governor of Sichuan. In the Qing Dynasty, the garden became a professional club for the agricultural and commercial communities, and teahouses and taverns appeared successively. In 1956, the municipal government began to renovate the garden and opened it to the public in 1961. As a typical historic garden of the Chinese Jiangnan style, the Yuyuan Garden has long been a famous tourist attraction in Shanghai.

Hu Xin Ting Teahouse
No. 257, Yuyuan Old Street

Sitting in the center of the City God Temple area, Hu Xin Ting is the oldest existing teahouse in Shanghai. It was originally called Fu Yi Ting, rebuilt into Hu Xin Ting in the Qing Dynasty and became a teahouse officially in 1855. Now it is acclaimed as the "No. 1 Teahouse in Shanghai".

Song Yue Lou Restaurant
No. 19-27, Bailing Road

The time-honored restaurant was founded in 1910, offering vegetarian noodles, vegetarian pastries and various vegetarian dishes in imitation of meat ones. Given its long history, Song Yue Lou is acclaimed as "the No. 1 Vegetarian Restaurant in Shanghai". In early years, Feng Zikai and some other Shanghai celebrities were regular customers of the restaurant, impressed by its vegetarian baozi. Specialties: Baozi Stuffed with Vegetables, Chinese Crabapple Cakes, Luo Han Vegetarian Noodles

Jiujiaochang Road

The Jiujiaochang Road west of the City God Temple is an old road with a long history. It starts from Fuyou Road in the north and ends at Middle Fangbang Road in the south, running about 299 meters long. In the Ming Dynasty, this place was for garrison and military exercises.

Huabao Tower No. 265, Middle Fangbang Road

The elegant and luxurious Huabao Tower was once the earliest antique market and the largest handicraft shopping mall in Shanghai. After being upgraded and renovated, it focuses on mid-to-high-end tea sets and tea culture with life aesthetics, and incorporates multiple business types, such as exhibition, literati gathering, auction and live broadcast.

Ancient Town Park
No. 333, Renmin Road

Located in the northeast corner of the Yuyuan Garden, this place was once the well-known "Danfeng Tower", which was a corner of the city wall of former Shanghai County and one of the "Eight Scenic Spots of Shanghai". The city wall was built in Shanghai to resist the invaders. After peace returned to the Old City, the nearby Danfeng Tower and some other buildings were moved onto the city wall for the people to pray and enjoy entertainment.

Dajing Pavilion
No. 259-269, Dajing Road

Located at the Small North Gate of the Old City, it is one of the two sections of the ancient city wall that have survived to this day in the Old City of Shanghai. The wall of Dajing Pavilion was originally an arrow platform, but was built into the Guan Yu Temple later. In the Qing Dynasty, this place was named Dajing after the inscription "Da Qian Sheng Jing (Great Scene of the World)". In the first year of the Republic of China era, the city wall hindered the development of the city's economy and transportation, and thus was demolished. But the Dajing Pavilion and a 50-meter-long section of the ancient wall beside it remained as the wall demolition command was located at the Dajing Pavilion.
