TOURISM 是个好地方

Dear friends, if you've been to Xinjiang, it will surely remain in your dreams, forever captivating your heart. If you haven't yet visited Xinjiang, it's already calling to you, enchanting you every second.

Xinjiang is beautiful year-round: spring blossoms, summer grasslands, autumn poplars, and winter snow. Right now, thousands of miles away, Xinjiang is entering its most enchanting autumn and winter seasons.

After the romance of spring and the vibrancy of summer, Xinjiang unveils its majestic autumn and pristine winter.

Autumn is the most beautiful season in Xinjiang.

Autumn in Xinjiang boasts colorful forests and lakes. When autumn arrives in Kanas, it brings breathtaking scenery of mountains and lakes. The colorful forests of the Altai Mountains, the quaint Tuva people, the ever-changing waters of the Sacred Lake, and the mysterious Lake Monster, all come together to create a romantic and poetic autumn in Xinjiang.

Autumn in Xinjiang features golden poplars. You will never truly understand the magnificence of the poplars without visiting the Tarim Basin. Nor will you understand the glory of life without seeing the poplars. The vast majority of the world's poplars grow in China, and over 90% of China's poplars are in the Tarim Basin. In the deep autumn, the golden poplars - "living for a thousand years without dying, dead for a thousand years without falling, fallen for a thousand years without decaying" - adorn the banks of the Tarim River like a vibrant oil painting.

Xinjiang's autumn also includes vast, ochre deserts. The endless sands of the Taklamakan Desert, China's largest desert and known as the "Sea of Death", stand as a testament to nature's awe-inspiring power. The Gurbantünggüt Desert redefines deserts, featuring lakes, wetlands and a boundless starry sky. The Kumtag Desert, the only desert in the world connected to a city, serves as a living example of harmony between humans and deserts.

Xinjiang's autumn is majestic yet fleeting, with a crystal-clear, fairytale-like winter quietly arriving before you even notice.
