About Macao

Macao used to be a small fishing village on the south-eastern coast of China. Its oyster farming history gave it the old names of Hou Keng (Oyster Mirror) and Hou Keng Ou (Oyster Mirror Harbour). Legend has it that the origin of the names came from the oysters that shone like mirrors. Meanwhile, a Qianlong-era (1711-1799) record attributed the name to the mirror-like roundness of the two bays in the north and south.

The fate of the city was forever changed when Portuguese merchants and missionaries arrived in the mid-16th century. Upon landing, they asked the villagers for the name. The villagers thought they were referring to the temple, so they told them it was "Ma Kok". The Portuguese translated it into "Macau", giving the village a new name altogether. Macao's sovereignty was returned to China on December 20, 1999. The city has since become one of the two Special Administrative Regions (SAR), alongside Hong Kong.

The culture and architecture of Macao reflect centuries of cultural exchange between the East and West. The agglomeration of foreigners in the Historic Centre in the past has given rise to many character buildings. Its collection of Western-style buildings is the oldest in China and is listed as a UNESCO heritage site.

Underneath Macao's elegant shell is a lively soul. Traditional food stalls exist alongside fine dining restaurants and luxurious hotels. Cafés can be found on every corner. This energetic food scene along with Macanese cuisine has earned Macao the UNESCO title of "Creative City of Gastronomy".

Macao consists of the Macao Peninsula and the islands of Taipa and Coloane. Four bridges connect the peninsula and Taipa, while reclamation brings the two islands together. The area of Macao continues to expand, now spanning over 30 square kilometres. Despite its small size, it accommodates almost 700,000 people, making it one of the densest cities in the world. 90 percent of Macao population is Chinese, and the rest are Portuguese and Filipino. The official languages are Chinese and Portuguese, but most people can communicate in Cantonese, Mandarin and English.

Moreover, Macao also hosts a number of world-class events, such as Macao Grand Prix, Macao International Fireworks Display Contest and Macao International Music Festival. The city is bustling year round. Macao is also home to many internationally acclaimed entertainment venues. They are exquisitely decorated, well-equipped and conveniently connected to the hotels and shopping malls. The true colours of the city shine through in its contrast—between the humble character buildings and five-star hotels; small local shops and international luxury brands.

UNESCO World Heritage

The small area of Macao houses many historical gems. In particular, 22 buildings on the Macao Peninsula and their eight adjoining public squares were declared a UNESCO World Heritage site on July 15, 2005. Together, they are known as the Historic Centre of Macao. It gives people a glimpse into the lives of the Portuguese in the heyday. There is plenty of history contained in Macao for visitors to explore while the details are not explained for the limited area here.

Headquarters Building of the Marine and Water Bureau (Former Moorish Barracks)

Constructed in the late 19th century on the slope of Barra Hill, the building features a design that combines Arabic and Gothic elements. In particular, verandas with pointed arches run along almost all sides of the building. The three-tier decorations between the Islamic-style arches and the arrangement of the square with pointed ornaments on the parapet walls have a beautiful flow.

📍 Calçada da Barra, Macao

🕒 9am-6pm (Veranda)

Mandarin's House

The building was built before 1869 and was the residence and family home of Chinese theoretician Zheng Guanying. It is a Chinese-style compound that features architectural influences from the West. The master's quarters consist of two traditional enclosed courtyard houses. Cross-cultural elements can be seen in the decorative motifs on the false ceilings and the concrete cladding.

📍 10 Travessa de António da Silva, Macao
(Opposite Largo do Lilau)

🕒 10am-6pm (last entry at 5.30pm); closed on Wednesdays except during public holidays

Ruins of St Paul's College (Former Mater Dei Church, forecourt and staircase)

The Church of Mater Dei was built at the beginning of the 17th century. A fire in 1835 destroyed the church and the adjacent St. Paul's College. Only the church's façade, foundation and outside steps could be saved. The baroque-style façade also features Chinese characters and oriental chrysanthemum motifs. Following five years of archaeological and restoration work by the Macao government in the 1990s, the Sacred Art Museum and Crypt is now open to the public.

- 📍 Company of Jesus Square, Macao
- 🕒 The façade is accessible round the clock every day; Sacred Art Museum and Crypt—9am–6pm (last entry at 5.30pm); 9am–2pm on Tuesdays; open on public holidays; Ruins of St Paul's—9am–6pm (last entry at 5.30pm)

Cathedral

First completed around 1622, the Cathedral was rebuilt several times following severe typhoon damage. The main building has a sloping roof, supported by a wooden truss. The bell tower has three floors with a flat roof. The interior keeps its neoclassical design since its reconstruction in 1937. The Portuguese folding screens at the entrance, statues and stained glass windows are of great historical value. During the colonial days, every new governor would visit the Cathedral and place his sceptre, the symbol of authority, next to the statue of the Virgin Mary.

- 📍 1 Largo da Sé, Macao
- 🕒 7.30am–8pm

Lou Kau Mansion

Named after its former resident, a prominent merchant named Lou Kau, the mansion was believed to be built in 1889. The two-storey, traditional grey-brick courtyard house is organised in a three-by-three grid. Its architectural characteristics are typical of residential houses in the late Qing Dynasty. The interior blends influences from the East and West. Oriental elements are seen in the screens, carved bricks, roof statues, calligraphy banners and windows decorated with oyster shells. These are contrasted with Western features such as Portuguese-style windows, colourful glass and false ceilings.

- 📍 7 Travessa da Sé, Macao
- 🕒 10am–6pm (last entry at 5.30pm); closed on Mondays except during public holidays

Na Tcha Temple (next to the Ruins of St. Paul's College)

The temple has a history of over 100 years and is dedicated to the worship of the deity Na Tcha, the son of mythical military commander Li Jing. It is a simple, single chamber building with brick walls and a traditional flush-gable roof. The building is painted grey with little ornamentation.

- 📍 Calçada de São Francisco Xavier, Macao (next to the Ruins of St Paul's)
- 🕒 Na Tcha Temple—8am–5pm; Na Tcha Exhibition Room—10am–6pm (last entry at 5.30pm); closed on Wednesdays except during public holidays

Guia Fortress, Chapel of Our Lady of the Snows and Lighthouse

Perched on the top of Guia Hill, the fortress overlooks the Macao Peninsula. It was a restricted military zone until 1976 when the Portuguese army left Macao. The lighthouse built in the 19th century was the first modern lighthouse on the Chinese coast, and its location is the official geographic coordinates of Macao. The chapel was built in the 17th century. Its fresco paintings were created with Chinese techniques, another example of Macao's multiculturalism.

- 📍 Guia Hill, Macao
- 🕒 Fortress—9am-6pm (last entry at 5:30pm); Chapel—10am-5pm; Lighthouse not open to the public

A-Ma Temple (Barra Temple)

The oldest existing temple in Macao, A-Ma Temple consists of the Gate Pavilion, the Memorial Arch, the Prayer Hall, the Hall of Benevolence, the Hall of Guanyin, and Zhengjiao Chanlin (a Buddhist pavilion). Each forms a small part of the well-ordered complex which sits in perfect harmony with its surrounding nature. Exquisite craftsmanship can be observed in the lattice windows, upturned roof ridges, roof charms, flush gable roof and decorative porcelain pieces.

- 📍 Barra Square, Macao
- 🕒 7am-6pm

Headquarters Building of the Municipal Affairs Bureau (Former Leal Senado Building)

The building was constructed in 1784 and served as Macao's original municipal chamber. It has since undergone multiple rounds of renovation. Southern Europe influence is apparent in its white walls, dark green door and window frames, blue and white tiles and Baroque-style lintels. The upper floor of the two-storey building houses a ceremonial meeting room. It leads to a library styled after the library of Mafra Convent in Portugal, which contains a broad collection of historical Portuguese volumes on Africa and the Far East.

- 📍 163 Avenida de Almeida Ribeiro, Macao
- 🕒 Building—9am-9pm; Gallery—9am-9pm (open to the public when there is an exhibition)

Sam Kai Vui Kun (Kuan Tai Temple)

Constructed in the Qianlong era (1711-1799) of the Qing Dynasty (1636-1912), the building was originally a meeting place for businessmen. At the venue, there is temple worshipping Kuan Tai (or Guan Yu, a general in ancient China) and the God of Wealth, so it is also known as Kuan Tai Temple. Its function as a meeting place used to co-exist with its worshipping purpose, but now serves only as a temple.

- 📍 Rua Sul do Mercado de São Domingos, Macao
- 🕒 9am-6pm

Headquarters Building of the Holy House of Mercy of Macao

Holy House of Mercy is a charitable organisation founded by D. Belchior Carneiro, the first Bishop of Macao. The building was constructed in the mid-18th century with bricks and granite. With the exception of the granite baseline of the ground floor arches, the whole building is painted white, giving it a touch of elegance and solemnity. It features elaborate decorations of a variety of styles. Artefacts of the organisation and the Catholic Church are displayed in the museum.

- 📍 2 Travessa da Misericórdia, Macao (Senado Square)
- 🕒 Museum—10am-1pm and 2.30pm-5.30pm; closed on Mondays and public holidays

St. Joseph's Seminary Church, forecourt and staircase

The seminary was founded in the 18th century by Jesuit missionaries. The church adjacent to it was the second largest in Macao when it was first built, after the original Church of Mater Dei (Ruins of St Paul's). The humble-looking seminary is contrasted against the extravagant Baroque-style church. The church's altars are lavishly decorated. A broken pediment, typical of baroque architecture, tops the main entrance. In one of the lateral altars lies one of Macao's most precious religious relics, a piece of arm bone from St. Francis Xavier. The seminary houses a great number of religious artefacts, such as oil paintings and statues. Part of the collection is well preserved at the Treasure of Sacred Art of St. Joseph's Seminary.

- 📍 Rua do Seminário, Macao
- 🕒 Church—10am-5pm; St Joseph's Seminary is closed to the public

Dom Pedro V Theatre

Built in the 19th century, Dom Pedro V Theatre was the first Western-style theatre in China and served as an important event venue for the Portuguese in the olden days. The façade is painted green, complementing the door and window frames of a darker shade. The red roof and yellow interior provide an eye-catching contrast. The theatre is neoclassical in design, incorporating a rectilinear plan. The foyer leads to a circular auditorium and the stage. Stairs on the sides lead to a crescent-shaped balcony.

- 📍 St. Augustine's Square, Macao
- 🕒 10am-6pm; closed on Tuesdays except during public holidays

Lilau Square

Lilau, which means "mountain spring" in Portuguese, is located in one of the earliest Portuguese settlements in the city, and the area's groundwater used to be the primary source of natural spring water in Macao. To this day, many Portuguese-style residential buildings and Art Deco apartment houses still surround Lilau Square. The former are built relatively low as they are dotted across the hilly slopes of Beco do Lilau. The latter are the two to three-story buildings located at No 7, 9, and 21. Adorned with pastel yellow exteriors and white geometric lines, these historic houses are brimming with picturesque Southern European charm.

- 📍 Lilau Square, Macao
- 🕒 Open all day

Sir Robert Ho Tung Library Building

Built before 1894, the building was purchased by Hong Kong tycoon Sir Robert Ho Tung and used as a villa in 1918. After Sir Ho Tung passed away, the building was donated to the Macao government to be repurposed as a public library. The original three-storey building opened to the public in 1958 and is now primarily used as a conservation site for ancient literature. In 2006, the government completed a new extension to provide a diverse range of services. These two buildings combine history, culture, and architectural art, blending the old and the new and preserving the scenic landscape of the surrounding gardens.

- 📍 3 Largo de Santo Agostinho, Macao
- 🕒 Monday 2pm-8pm; Tuesday to Sunday 8am-8pm

Mount Fortress

Mount Fortress, also known as the Fortress of Our Lady of the Mount of St. Paul, covers an area of around 8,000 square metres. It was first constructed in 1617 and took nearly ten years to complete. This fortress was an essential military defence facility in Macao, equipped with cisterns, military supply depots, and barracks. In the heart of the current Mount Fortress lies the Macao Museum, which opened in 1998. Above it, the Mount Fortress Garden provides panoramic views of the Ruins of St. Paul's and the city of Macao.

- 📍 Praceta do Museu de Macao
- 🕒 Mount Fortress and Garden: 7am-7pm
Macao Museum: 10am-6pm (no entry after 5.30pm); closed on Mondays except during public holidays

Headquarters Building of the Orient Foundation (Former Casa Garden of the Camões Grotto)

Built in 1770, Casa Garden was originally a villa for the Portuguese royal family and was likely Macao's first luxury residence with a villa-style garden. After the 1960s, it was converted into the Camões Museum and later underwent major renovations. The current architectural style has been significantly altered from its original appearance. The sloped roof has been replaced with a flat roof, the flowerbeds in front of the house have been replaced with a pool, the entrance now features a Spanish-style grand staircase, and the interior has been transformed into an exhibition space. Now, the historical building is the headquarters of Fundação Oriente.

- 📍 Beside Camões Garden
- 🕒 10am-7pm; closed on Mondays

Flavours of Macao

It's impossible to categorise Macao into one type of food since the region is quite literally a melting pot of cultures and cuisines. From humble street snacks and traditional family restaurants tucked away in nooks and crannies, to world-class restaurants, artisanal cafés and avant-garde dining, there's plenty to explore while you're here. If you're looking to get a true taste of Macao, there's no better way to do it than by eating around.

Crab congee and crispy dace balls

Bordering the Pearl River estuary, Macao has easy access to an abundant supply of freshwater crabs. These plump crustaceans are best enjoyed in congee, where every grain of rice is seeped with the flavours of its sweet and savoury roe. For textural contrast, order the dace balls, which are coated in chopped vermicelli and are deep-fried until they're crisp, fragrant and golden brown.

Steamed rice rolls with eggs and shallots

Steamed rice rolls may be a common snack in Cantonese-speaking regions, but this particular version is unique to Macao. This local speciality is made by pouring a rice-flour mixture over a cloth and steaming it with shallots and beaten eggs. Expertly rolled and cut into bite-sized pieces, the finished product bears a close resemblance to Japan's tamagoyaki omelette. Smooth and wonderfully fragrant on its own, these egg-enhanced rice rolls are even more delicious when eaten with accompanying condiments like soy sauce, sweet sauce and sesame sauce.

Pork chop bun

So much more than your regular ham sandwich, Macao's famed pork chop bun is a delicacy that can be prepared in many different ways. Individual restaurants have their own preference for breads—you can find everything from crusty loaves to pillowy soft white bread to even pineapple buns—but the most popular is probably a baguette-style roll that's crunchy on the outside and soft on the inside. The slab of pork nestled in between is thick and juicy, soaked in a Portuguese marinade that makes it deliciously tender and flavourful.

Portuguese egg tart

British-born Andrew Stow introduced Portuguese egg tarts to Macao and perfected the recipe to create a unique local version. Although this pastry may resemble Hong Kong-style egg tarts, it features brown and black spots on top due to the addition of cinnamon and lemon peel to the egg yolk mixture, which becomes caramelised during the baking process. The result is a pastry that is more flavourful than traditional egg tarts, with a rich eggy flavour rounded off by a hint of caramelised sugar, and layers upon layers of fluffy puff pastries that make up its crust. For a taste of authentic Portuguese egg tarts in Macao, we recommend heading to Lord Stow's Bakery and Margaret's Café e Nata.

Milk pudding with ginger

Originally from Daliang of China's Shunde district, these simple yet satisfying puddings have gained immense popularity in Macao. They're made by adding ginger juice to milk that's been boiled and cooled. The result is a smooth and aromatic pudding rich in milky flavour. This dish is so revered that some establishments have gone the extra mile by setting up their own dairy farms to create the perfect milk pudding.

Traditional ice cream

Nowadays, ice cream comes in infinite flavours and can be served in all shapes, sizes and styles, but we'll always have a soft spot for the classics. In Macao, there are several spots that still churn ice cream the old-fashioned way. At Lai Kei, for example, not only are the red bean popsicles, ice cream blocks and ice cream sandwiches delicious, the retro packaging—featuring a drawing of a young girl has become synonymous with the store—is also a whimsical draw. There's also Gelatina Mok Yi Kei, famous for its agar agar as well as its musang king durian ice cream. Last but not least, be sure to visit Hung Heng Cocos, which specialises in small-batch, handmade coconut ice cream.

Shrimp roe noodles

This beloved dish packs a massive punch in the flavour department. A restaurant that is serious about this dish abstains from using automated machinery. The traditional way of making these noodles is to hand-knead the dough with a bamboo pole. The eggy, toothsome noodles topped with freshly roasted shrimp roe are served in a dried flounder broth full of umami.

Portuguese cuisine

Macao is home to some of the best and most authentic Portuguese food outside of Portugal. Located on the west coast of the Iberian Peninsula, Portugal is known for using a lot of fresh seafood and olive oil in its cooking. Popular dishes include salted cod cakes, sardines cooked in olive oil and seafood stews with bread. You'll find these dishes and other Portuguese favourites served at all sorts of establishments in Macao, from small, family-run eateries to high-end restaurants.

Macanese cuisine

When the Portuguese travelled to Asia hundreds of years ago, they brought with them their own national dishes and cooking styles but also discovered many of Asia's unique ingredients and spices along the way. After settling in Macao, many became influenced by the local food and flavours and married them with their own hometown staples to create a new cuisine that has now become distinct to the region. For a true taste of Macao, try classic dishes such as African chicken, Portuguese chicken and duck stew.

Halal dining

Muslim travelers can delight in an extensive choice of delectable Halal food options that cater to their dietary needs. Accredited Halal restaurants in Macao, certified by the "Incorporated Trustees of the Islamic Community Fund of Hong Kong", provide Muslim visitors with a wide range of dining options that strictly adhere to Halal food preparation criteria.

Photo opportunities have now become a factor in a destination's popularity. In Macao, every street corner makes for a good photo opportunity. Within the historical European architecture are cultural spots where the city's Portuguese heritage shines through, as well as modern marvels that perfectly reflect the contemporary side of Macao.

Rua da Felicidade (Happiness Street)

Old brothel buildings line the street of this former red-light district. The green houses with Chinese window frames and traditional signboards give it a unique feel. It is where films Isabella and Butterfly were shot.

Albergue da Santa Casa da Misericórdia (Holy House of Mercy Albergue)

The albergue consists of two yellow Portuguese houses standing in front of a small courtyard, overlooked by an old camphor tree. It used to be a sanctuary for comb sisters—women who choose to stay single all their life—but had also given shelter to those in need. The houses have now been transformed into an art and culture space. Nearby, another European heritage building houses Pavilhão de Exposições e Espectáculos Artísticos para Jovens. It serves as an art and exhibition space for youth and hosts events such as concerts and exhibitions from time to time.

Taipa Houses

Taipa Houses refer to a complex of five buildings built in the 1920s. They are typical examples of Portuguese architecture in Macao. One of them has been revitalised into "Macanese Living Museum", while the others now host exhibitions and sell books. The white lines on the houses contrast nicely against the pastel green base. The door and window frames are decorated with delicate carving. The furniture inside blends influences from the East and West and reflects the lives of the Portuguese and Macanese in the olden days. A beautiful mangrove swamp nearby further adds to the charm.

Traditional festivals and mega events

Macao is a lively city; there is not a month without festivals or events. Visit Macao anytime and it will always be bustling. Chinese festivals exist alongside Catholic traditions in the multicultural society of Macao. The many mega carnivals further add to the festive ambience of the city.

FEB

Chinese New Year

Chinese New Year is a busy time for many families. People flock to the shop to get new clothes and shoes before New Year's Day. Houses are cleaned from top to bottom, red couplets are put up, and a feast is prepared. The festive atmosphere always spreads across the entire city, with exquisitely decorated malls and lion dances in the streets. During the festival, people will put on their new garments to greet relatives and friends at their places. Apart from traditional celebrations, Macao also hosts a parade and fireworks show during Chinese New Year.

FEB

Procession of the Passion of Our Lord, the God Jesus

A major event for the Catholic population in Macao, the procession takes place on the first Saturday and Sunday of Lent. It commemorates the journey where Jesus carried the cross up Calvary, as depicted in the Bible. Clergy members in purple gowns lead the solemn procession through multiple landmarks and streets. The tradition first arrived in Macao in the 16th century from southern Europe and has now become an integral part of the city's culture.

APR

Macao International Travel Industry Expo (MITE)

The Macao International Travel Expo (MITE) is organised by the Macao Government Tourism Office with the goal of highlighting Macao's role as a valuable connection point within the tourism industry. The expo aims to facilitate global businesses by providing opportunities for exchanging insights and exploring potential partnerships. MITE will feature a range of exciting activities and showcases, including the "Gastronomy Pavilion" and "The Cellar", to further amplify Macao's reputation as the "Creative City of Gastronomy".

Macao Arts Festival

Local and overseas artists are invited to perform in this annual extravaganza. It is a wide variety of shows highlighting dance, live music and other forms of performing arts. Some are more traditional while others are experimental. There are also a number of seminars and workshops for people looking to obtain a deeper understanding of performance art.

Drunken Dragon Festival

The Drunken Dragon Festival is celebrated by the fishmongers of Macao. On the evening of the seventh day of the fourth month of the lunar calendar, they would gather in the market and sit around the table to dine. The tradition has evolved into the "longevity rice" feast. During the festival, fishmongers wave the wooden dragons on the incense burner table to pray for peace and fortune in the trade. Now, it has become a tradition for Sam Kai Vui Kun to host a joyous ceremony on the day of the festival, where lion and dragon dances are performed and longevity rice is given away.

MAY

Procession of Our Lady of Fátima

The procession takes place each year on May 13, with the participation of the Bishop of the Diocese of Macao, clergy members and a number of local and foreign faithful. They walk from the St. Dominic's Church to the Penha Chapel, reciting the Rosary and singing hymns along the way. It also features three children in traditional Portuguese costumes, symbolising the shepherds who witnessed the apparitions of the Virgin Mary. The procession celebrates the Apparition in Fátima, Portugal and has become a tradition in Macao since 1929.

Dragon Boat Festival

The festival commemorates the death of patriotic poet Qu Yuan, who drowned himself in the river. When people took their boats out to rescue him, they threw rice dumplings into the river so the fish would not eat him. Over time, it has evolved into the Dragon Boat Festival where rice dumplings are eaten and dragon boat races are held. Macao International Dragon Boat Races have become an important sport event. Athletes gather at Nam Van Lake, drums are beaten and flags are flown. It is an energetic festival with a lot to see and do.

JUN

Macao Lotus Flower Festival

Lotus is seen as a symbol of morality in Chinese culture. It is also the floral emblem of Macao. The annual Lotus Flower Festival showcases thousands of Lotus pots in different corners of Macao as well as floral exhibitions, photography exhibitions and workshops.

Macao International Fireworks Display Contest

Autumn in Macao begins with splendid fireworks igniting the night sky. The Macao International Fireworks Display Contest brings high-calibre pyrotechnics experts from around the globe to present a stunning feast of senses. Alongside the pyrotechnics, visitors can savour delicacies, enjoy music and games in the Fireworks Carnival, taking the celebration to new heights.

Museums

Macao boasts a rich cultural heritage that's proudly displayed in its many museums. Aside from featuring fascinating exhibitions and ancient relics that offer a glimpse into the past, some of these institutions are housed in historical sites that are attractions in their own right. If you want to learn even more about this vibrant city, Macao also has great museums dedicated to everything from art and religion to the development of the local community.

Academy Jao Tsung-i

The late scholar Jao Tsung-i shared a profound relationship with Macao. Not only was Jao a chair professor at the School of Arts of the University of East Asia, he was also an advisor in the famed archaeological excavation at Hac Sá Beach. This academy—housed in a protected heritage site adorned with neoclassical columns, arches and a beautiful arcade—celebrates Jao's academic achievements and contributions through a collection of his paintings, calligraphy, writings and catalogues.

Recommended Souvenirs

No trip is complete without souvenir shopping. Macao boasts plenty of unique items that make great mementos to be shared with friends and family. From traditional Chinese snacks and pastries to Portuguese canned goods and wines, you're bound to find something to help commemorate your trip. Leave some room in your suitcase!

Chinese snacks

In Macao, it's easy to find souvenirs that reflect the city's Chinese cultural heritage. The most popular items in this respect are traditional Chinese snacks. The varieties are endless and include delicious nibbles such as almond cookies, beef jerky, egg rolls, peanut candies and nougats, among many others. These treats are sold everywhere, from large-scale chains to time-honoured stores and family-run shops. For a truly unique snack, be sure to visit Pastelaria Chui Heong. Its almond cookies are unlike any other, containing whole almonds that are roasted over a charcoal fire for a deliciously smoky aroma.

Canned seafood

Loja das Conservas Macau specialises in canned seafood from Portugal. You'll find a wide range of gourmet tinned catch, including sardines, tuna, mackerel, squid, octopus and cod roe. Many are packed with herbs and seasonings for greater flavour. The store imports products from different conserveiras in Portugal and even offers limited-edition cans that are hard to come by anywhere else. Like the store itself, the canned goods boast cool and trendy designs, making them great choices for souvenirs.

Portuguese wines

Forget French wines—Portugal also produces some truly amazing vino and is home to a number of wine regions. Aside from your typical reds and whites, the city of Porto in the northern part of the country is famed for a sweet fortified wine known as Port. During its 400-year rule, the Portuguese has made its wine culture an integral part of Macao, and this legacy continues to thrive to this day. If you want a taste, you can easily find a bottle to enjoy with loved ones.

Lemon King

Specialising in preserved snacks, Lemon King is a beloved old-time brand originating from Hong Kong. Relatives of the founder established a separate brand in Macao. The store's signature liquorice lemon is made with Thai limes and boasts a refreshingly sweet and zesty flavour. Other popular items include preserved ginger, dried plums, liquorice olives and other mouth-watering snacks.

Pastelaria Han Van

Shrimp roe noodles may be common, but the type sold at Pastelaria Han Van are one of a kind. While most places only mix the roe into the noodles, Han Van goes a step further by smearing a thick layer of roe onto every bundle of noodles, resulting in a product that's amped up in both taste and aroma. There's also no alkaline water in the noodles. Instead, the al dente texture rely solely on shrimp roe, and the dried flounder broth for flavour.

Tong Iec Pak Fa Fui

Founded more than 100 years ago, Pak Fa Fui is best known for its four signature products: preserved apricots, preserved ginger, dried mango and sweetened vinegar. The apricots have reached cult status with locals and visitors alike. Not only are they still made the traditional way, but they're also sold in charming retro-esque boxes that have been adorned with the same goddess illustration throughout the years. Grab a box for a taste of nostalgia.
